

John Blanton, Jr.

John Blanton Jr. is the Research Programs Manager for the Agricultural Division at the Samuel Roberts Noble Foundation. Dr. Blanton received his Bachelors and Masters of Science degrees in Animal Science from New Mexico State University, his Doctoral degree in Growth and Development from Purdue University, and postdoctoral training in molecular genetics at Indiana University-Indianapolis. Dr. Blanton's research interests focus on improving animal efficiency and carcass performance through matching genetics to environment, managing animal health and the effective utilization of new technologies. Dr. Blanton has over 30 publication and 40 abstracts in national and international journals and has been awarded 4 patents related to his field of study.